
Teaching about War in International Contexts

Teaching and Learning Social Studies

Series editor
William B. Russell III

The Teaching and Learning Social Studies book series primarily focuses on contemporary issues related to the teaching and learning of social studies. The primary aim is to create a substantive body of scholarship, which can improve the understanding of the theory, research, and practice of social studies education.

OTHER TITLES IN THE TEACHING AND LEARNING SOCIAL STUDIES SERIES

Social Studies Instruction, Learning, and Assessment in the Contemporary World: Leveraging the Past to Form a New Future

Visual Literacy in the K-12 Social Studies Classroom

At the Schoolhouse Gate: Stakeholder Perceptions of First Amendment Rights and Responsibilities in U.S. Public Schools

Teaching about War in International Contexts

Pedagogical Practices in Secondary Social Studies Classrooms

Edited by

Jing A. Williams

University of South Dakota, USA

And

Natalie Keefer

University of Louisiana Lafayette, USA

United Kingdom – North America – Japan
India – Malaysia – China

Emerald Publishing Limited, Floor 5, Northspring, 21-23 Wellington Street,
Leeds LS1 4DL

First edition 2026

Copyright © 2026 Emerald Publishing Limited.
All rights of reproduction in any form reserved.

Cover photo: iStock/davlt85 and Fahronl

Reprints and permissions service

Contact: www.copyright.com

No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, transmitted in any form or by any means electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise without either the prior written permission of the publisher or a licence permitting restricted copying issued in the UK by The Copyright Licensing Agency and in the USA by The Copyright Clearance Center. Any opinions expressed in the chapters are those of the authors. Whilst Emerald makes every effort to ensure the quality and accuracy of its content, Emerald makes no representation implied or otherwise, as to the chapters' suitability and application and disclaims any warranties, express or implied, to their use.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

ISBN: 978-1-80686-122-4 (Hardback)

ISBN: 978-1-80686-124-8 (Paperback)

ISBN: 978-1-80686-121-7 (PDF)

ISBN: 978-1-80686-123-1 (EPUB)

Typeset by TNQ Tech

To those who teach about war with honesty, empathy, and courage—planting the seeds of peace in every lesson.

This page intentionally left blank

CONTENTS

About the Editors ix

About the Contributors..... xi

Acknowledgments xv

Introduction..... 1

Jing A. Williams and Natalie Keefer

PART I

EXPLORING THE LEGACY OF COLONIALISM

1 The Decolonization of the Black Hills War..... 13

John Adamski and Michael Bayer

2 Deconstructing the Master Narrative of Japan’s Wars..... 29

Mizuki Hoshi and Sota Ono

PART II

FOSTERING CRITICAL THINKING SKILLS

3 Just War Theory and the American War of Independence..... 51

Jonathan L. Lancaster and Matthew McKenna

4 Teaching About War for Reconciliation: Gender, Memory, and Emotion in East Asia 81

Boeun Cha

5 Teaching the Cold War in Chinese International Schools: A Lesson About Political Socialization to Promote Reflective Learning..... 103
Kyle P. O'Brien and Peter Miller

PART III

CONSIDERING WAR AND PEACE

6 Engaging With the Syrian Civil War Through Drama Pedagogy: Reflections on Pre-service Teacher Research 121
M.J. Palombo

7 Creating Memory Through a Digital Archive: Inquiry-Based Learning and Holocaust Education..... 143
Taylor Hamblin

8 Is the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Producing Chaos or Providing Security? A Lesson About the Complexities of Global Relationships and Agreements..... 159
Clint Kovach and Elizabeth Yeager Washington

9 Teaching Conflict and Peace: Strategies Through a Human Rights Education Approach..... 177
Jacob Skrzypiec, Sarah Wiederecht and Ian McGregor

ABOUT THE EDITORS

Jing A. Williams is a Professor of Social Studies Education at the University of South Dakota. She teaches elementary and secondary social studies methods courses. Dr Williams earned her PhD in Curriculum and Instruction from Ohio University. She was the President (2018–2020) of the International Assembly of the National Council for the Social Studies. In the summer of 2024, Dr Williams was a Visiting Professor at the Seoul National University of Education in Seoul, South Korea. Her research focuses on teaching social studies with a global perspective and difficult histories. She is the lead author of Teaching with a global perspective: Approaches and strategies for secondary social studies teachers. She serves as Book and Media Review Editor of the Journal of International Social Studies.

Natalie Keefer is an Associate Professor of Social Studies Education, Graduate Coordinator, and Co-Director of the Louisiana Center for Research and Education on Languages and Literacies (LA CREoLL) at the University of Louisiana Lafayette. Dr Keefer holds the Joan D. and Alexander S. Haig/BORSF Endowed Professorship and received the 2021–2022 UL Lafayette Research Excellence Award. She earned her PhD in Curriculum and Instruction with a cognate in Anthropology from the University of South Florida. While earning her PhD, Dr Keefer taught elementary and secondary social studies methods, and social foundations of education in the College of Education at University of South Florida. She also has ten years teaching experience as a high school social studies teacher in Tampa, Florida. Dr Keefer's research interests include educational anthropology, discourse analysis, mindfulness in K-16 education, social studies pedagogy in French immersion and multilingual contexts, citizenship education, and human rights education. She serves as editor of the Journal of International Social Studies.

This page intentionally left blank

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

John Adamski is a grammar school principal in Kearny, New Jersey, where he also lives. A former curriculum supervisor, instructional coach, and AP History teacher, he advises student publications and works summers with The New York Times School of Education. He teaches education courses at Montclair State University and New Jersey City University and is a fifth-year doctoral student at Montclair. He co-authored article “Examining Teacher Identity and Possible Selves During a Worldwide Pandemic” (Journal of Research in Education) and contributed to Educational Psychology’s Response to Transformational Experiences in the Classroom: Research and Theory Meets Teaching and Learning.

Michael Bayer is a high school history teacher from Kearny, New Jersey. He earned his bachelor’s degree from East Stroudsburg University in 2008 and his master’s degree from Southern New Hampshire University in 2018. For the past 16 years he has served as a history teacher for Kearny High School, his alma mater, specializing in early American history. In this role, he has taught students at several academic levels, including the Honors Program and Early College enrollment. Mr Bayer continues to live in his hometown of Kearny with his wife, a youth services librarian, and young son.

Boeun Cha is an Affiliate Professor at the Graduate School of Education, Yonsei University. She was also a visiting scholar at the University of South Dakota and Tokyo Gakugei University. Her research focuses on citizenship and history education in multicultural societies, emphasizing transnational memory, global citizenship, and the emotional dimensions of teaching difficult histories. She has received national awards for excellence in diversity and international education from South Korea’s Ministry of Education. Her publications explore the intersections of memory, identity, and education, with a commitment to fostering dialogue-based approaches to teaching justice, peace, and reconciliation.

Taylor Hamblin joined the University of Wisconsin-La Crosse in 2024, where he co-leads the Broadfield Social Studies Education Program. He previously taught social studies methods and related courses at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, and before that, 8th-grade US. History and Spanish in South Dakota. Hamblin's work advances inquiry-based learning and youth civic engagement through interdisciplinary projects such as Protecting Nebraska Waters and Nebraska Stories of Humanity. These initiatives support students in exploring complex questions, developing disciplinary skills, analyzing primary sources, and taking informed civic action.

Mizuki Hoshi is an Associate Professor of Social Studies Education in the Department of Language & Social Education at the Hokkaido University of Education, Japan. His research interests include history education, with a particular focus on how students make meaning of history lessons and how students react emotionally when learning "difficult history." He has received the research award from the Japanese Educational Research Association for the Social Studies (JERASS) in 2020. Recently, his research has examined students' emotional reactions to learning about Ainu, the indigenous peoples of Japan from a sociocultural perspective.

Clint Kovach is in his 11th year teaching Advanced Placement United States History and Honors United States History to high school students at PK. Yonge Developmental Research School in Gainesville, Florida. He previously taught Advanced Placement Human Geography and United States History courses in Palm Beach County for 13 years. Clint has a BA in Social Science from Florida Atlantic University and an MEd Curriculum and Instruction-Educational Technology from the University of Florida. He has been married for 24 years and has 2 kids, his son attends the University of Florida, and his daughter is a University of Florida graduate.

Jonathan L. Lancaster is an educator, researcher, and writer with a passion for history, politics, and the humanities. He teaches high school social studies in Hackensack, New Jersey, offering courses in World History, United States History, politics, war, and social science research. He is also a PhD student at Montclair State University, where his research centers around historical narratives, school leadership practices, and the role of the humanities in shaping civic engagement.

Ian McGregor is the PackTeach coordinator and an Assistant Professor of secondary education in the College of Education & Human Development at the University of Nevada, Reno. His scholarship and teaching focus on social studies teacher preparation, human rights education, and civics/citizenship education with an emphasis on teaching difficult history. His current research explores how teachers and students conceptualize citizenship in human rights education and the use of virtual interactive technologies in Holocaust museum education. Before joining the Wolf Pack, Dr McGregor was a high school social studies teacher in Louisiana for 6 years.

Matthew McKenna is an educator and writer who teaches high school social studies in Teterboro, New Jersey. In education, he has spent his 18 years encouraging students to critically examine historical narratives and American exceptionalism through instruction that emphasizes empathy and relevancy. Outside of the classroom, Matthew has been an active anti-imperialist advocate.

Peter Miller is a social studies teacher and department chair at Maple Leaf International School in Chongqing, China. Peter is from Ontario, Canada, and he completed his bachelor's degree in history at the University of Guelph and his teaching practicum at the University of Windsor. For the last six years, Peter has taught Ancient/Modern World History and Psychology, among other courses, at a Chinese international school.

Kyle P. O'Brien is a PhD candidate and associate instructor at Indiana University. Prior to beginning his doctoral studies, Kyle served as a social studies teacher, curriculum developer, and department chair in the United States and China. At Indiana University he has taught courses in educational philosophy, multicultural education, and field experiences in social studies education. His research broadly focuses on how social studies teachers navigate challenging political contexts, and he is particularly interested in the affective experience of social studies teachers who take extreme risks.

Sota Ono is an Assistant Professor at the Miyazaki Sangyo-keiei University, Japan. He is engaged in a teacher training course for secondary social studies. In his doctoral program, he organized research trends on the concept of "difficult history" and considered how it could be put into social studies practice in Japan. He received his doctoral degree (in education) from the Graduate School of Humanities and Social Sciences, Hiroshima University, in 2023. His main research interests are pedagogy for "difficult history" in Japan and curriculum development through collaboration between researchers and practitioners.

MJ Palombo is an educator and researcher who developed an interest in bridging the gaps between theory and practice in social studies during her preservice education. Before her work in higher education began, Mia taught middle-level social studies in an urban district in the Northeastern United States where she also served as the school's Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Chair. Her dissertation explores the intersections between social studies and queer theory, focusing on how educators can elevate their critical consciousness around LGBTQIA+ topics to better support all students. Other research interests include collaboration between teacher preparation programs and community organizations.

Jacob Skrzypiec is an experienced social studies educator in Manchester, Connecticut, where he teaches US History, UConn Early College Experience Human Rights, ECE Conflict & Peace Studies, and a multicultural education course for future educators. Jacob serves on the steering committee for Human Rights Educators USA and is the co-chair of the Human Rights Education Community at the National Council for the Social Studies. Jacob holds a Masters in Curriculum and Instruction and is actively pursuing his Ed.D. in Educational Leadership at the University of Connecticut.

Sarah Wiederecht is a experienced social studies teacher in Manchester, Connecticut. She has taught courses including Modern World History, UConn Early College Experience Human Rights, Human Rights for EL students, UConn Early College Experience Conflict & Peace Studies, Sociology, and interdisciplinary social studies, art, and science courses. She has also presented at education conferences such as the National Council for Social Studies about teaching through human rights. She graduated from Quinnipiac University, earning her Masters in Secondary Education and Bachelors in History.

Elizabeth Yeager Washington is Professor and Coordinator of Social Studies Education at The University of Florida. Her research interests include civic education, the teaching of controversial issues and difficult history, and the teaching of social issues. Dr Washington graduated cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from The University of Alabama. She earned her PhD in Curriculum and Instruction from The University of Texas at Austin. She served as editor of Theory and Research in Education from 2001–2007. Presently, she serves on the Advisory Board for Trends and Issues in Social Studies and on the Editorial Board of the Annals of Social Studies Education Research for Teachers.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the support, patience, and dedication of many people.

First and foremost, we extend our heartfelt thanks to our families. Your steady encouragement, understanding, and belief in the value of this work sustained us through the many stages of writing and editing. Your support made the long hours and difficult decisions more manageable, and we are deeply grateful.

We are equally thankful to the authors who contributed to this volume. Your insight, expertise, and commitment to this project—despite the many delays and the time it has taken to bring it to completion—are truly appreciated. Your patience and perseverance speak to your passion for the subject and your trust in the collaborative process.

Finally, we wish to acknowledge all the history teachers around the world who engage students in meaningful conversations about war. Your work in the classroom—often quiet, often difficult—has a lasting impact. By approaching such a complex and painful subject with care, integrity, and nuance, you help shape thoughtful, informed citizens. This book is, in many ways, inspired by and dedicated to your efforts.